A Specific for Hooping-Cough.
It is known by a few individuals in the counties of Jefferson, Shelby, and Oldham, that I have a remedy that effectually cures Hooping-Cough. If there are remedies in America, or Europe that cure it, it is not within my knowledge, (except the one I use.) Physicians tell the families they attend it can be cured. I have no doubt they are correct in what they state. To get the medicine in use, and to help to sleep a deep-rooted prejudice, the faculty are invited to get the medicine, and save the little innocents whom they attend, and tell them no more can be cured. One dollar will pay for two bottles, which is a sufficiency for one child. This medicine can be conveyed to any part of the United States by express for a more liberal. CATALOGUE OF THE OFFICERS AND CADETS
OF THE KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE,
six miles from Frankfort, Ky., from September 13,
1858, to June 18, 1859, Frankfort: S. I. M. Major
& Co.

In looking over the Catalogue of this admirable institution, we were struck with its peculiar adaptation to the present exigency. At this school the young men have all the scientific education to be had at West Point, with a greater scope of scholastic study; and they can be as well fitted for military command as for civil pursuits. If the course of study and discipline, as laid down in these regulations, are pursued with the common diligence observed in ordinary colleges, it will furnish a class of men that is now a desideratum to the State, and is the kind of normal school that is wanted; carried on by private enterprise, and supported by the public patronage its intrinsic merit is sure to bring it to.

Any one who has read Washington Irving's description of Baron Steuben's efforts to drill the militia at Valley Forge, although he may smile at the old German's sputtering Dutch and English oaths at the awkwardness of the recruits, can form some idea of the importance attached to military discipline by the great Washington, who had led raw militia into many a battle, and saw their deficiency; and still, amid all the horrors and privations of that memorable winter, he warmly seconded the good Dutchman in his efforts to reduce the army to military subordination. We have seen recently a few thousand well disciplined British soldiers subjugating her Indian empire, in which were millions of undisciplined rebels, who were well armed and appointed in other respects. General Wool would not lead the Kentucky militia into Mexico until he had kept them for months in severe military regimen; and those who joined General Taylor were decimated, and nearly all their best officers killed, by disobeying orders, and which no well-trained soldier would thought of doing. Unless an army is properly disciplined it is totally unreliable, and no general of character would think of opposing a well disciplined army with a multitude of undisciplined men, even if they were as numerous as the sands on the sea shore.

The secret of the Roman success, as recorded by their historians, and by Caesar himself, who was the greatest captain among them all, lay in their perfect discipline; so of Cortez and Pizarro; and so of the British in the war of 1812: a few thousand veterans marched through our territory and burnt our capitol, and all the militia of Maryland and Virginia could not repel them.

We have in Kentucky the material of the finest soldiery in the world; and all that it requires to make them efficient in any emergency, is to organize our militia and instruct them in the elementary principles of military science. This is a matter that admits of no delay, and we feel that the Legislature ought to take it into serious consideration; for there are many cogent arguments that suggest themselves for such a step.

It was one of the earliest acts of Mr. Jefferson's administration to recommend to the several States a thorough organization of the militia; and it was a matter he never ceased to cherish, as opposed to a regular standing army. He saw that the Praetorians were the destruction of the Roman republic; that by the aid of a standing army Louis XI. of France overthrew the franchises of the free cities and broke the power of the nobles; that by the same arm the infamous race of Hapsburg was enabled for centuries to maintain sway over the Croat and the Pole, the Tyrolese and the Hungarian, without popularity in any province. On the other hand, he witnessed in his own day the irresistible prowess of the National Guard of France under Dumouriez and other generals of the Revolution, and the conscripts of Napoleon sweep away the armies of Europe with unconquerable fury from the Mediterranean to the Baltic.

These were the citizen soldiery that made French arms respected the world over; and ours can become so if we organize and discipline our militia. And although an occasion may never arise for offensive warfare, the time has come for a defensive preparation. A crusade is now being preached against the South, and her institutions from hundreds of pulpits, and by men more eloquent than Peter the Hermit; and if the voice of one man could array Europe in arms for a fanatical purpose, may not the voices of hundreds, joined to the prospect of plunder, precipitate upon us a horde of Vandals as rapacious as ever enlisted under Genseric. Ours is a border State, and whenever the conflict comes, we must stand the brunt of the battle. The States farther to the South can look on for years, with almost indifference, at the "conflict," and only after our territory has been penetrated a hundred miles, shall their turn begin. Geography has assigned Kentucky her position, and her people will accept it in no craven spirit; and our legislators should not leave it to a late posterity to reproach them with being unfaithful guardians upon our watch-towers.

We recommend this Military Institute to the patronage of the citizens of Kentucky; for their sons may require the sword as well as the scythe; and they will find, unless some good Providence give a different direction to this mad time, that those men will be most useful to their State who have made more proficiency in tactics than in the quieter paths of the classics.

The attention of persons visiting Louisville is called to the house of M. B. Swain, merchant tailor, No. 4, Masonic Temple. He keeps constantly on hand a superb assortment of cloths, cassimeres, and vestings, and as he employs none but the best of workmen, he can guarantee the making of them up in a style equal to any house in the city. He also keeps on hand all kinds of gentlemen's furnishing goods—shirts, cravats, suspenders, gloves, &c., which he sells as cheap as any house in the city. We have seen a great deal of Mr. S's work, and it has always given satisfaction to his customers.

The Maysville Eagle gives an account of a singular accident and escape of Edward Owen, son of Mr. L. D. Owen, of Lewis county, and a horse. The boy had just mounted and was riding off, when, in turning the horse, a hind foot struck the curbing of the well, throwing it down. The animal being startled, backed into the well. As he fell his fore feet caught on the edge, and the boy escaped, but the horse fell twenty feet to the bottom. He was extricated after five hours' labor, and strange to say, was uninjured.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Mrs. Margaret Gardner is anxious to get information in regard to her son, Andrew M. Gardner. He is thirty-one years old. When last heard from, about the 1st of August, he was engaged as overseer for Mr. Offutt, near Shelbyville, Ky. He left his employer shortly afterwards, and has not been heard of since. Information concerning him will be gratefully received by Mrs. Margaret Gardner, Covington, Ky.

LAND SALE.—The farm on which the late Joseph Gwinn resided for many years, on the Lexington road, was sold on Tuesday, the 22d, for $89 05 per acre, to R. Aitchison Alexander. There were 140 acres in the tract, with very moderate improvements.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY.—The December number of this Magazine is for sale at Mr. Bull's book store. Its table of contents embraces some of the most interesting articles we have ever read in it since its first publication.

A man named Phillips, arrested for stealing a horse in Scott county, was tried at the recent session of the court at Georgetown, and sentenced to five years imprisonment in the penitentiary at Frankfort.

Hogs.—We learn from a passenger on the cars, just from Cincinnati, that hogs sold as high as $4 90 gross.

Stock.—Thirteen shares of Bank of Kentucky stock sold at 121 in Philadelphia on Monday.

THEATRE.—We take pleasure in announcing to our citizens that the old Frankfort favorites, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Chapman, will give a musical and dramatic entertainment at Metropolitan Hall to-night, which we feel safe in saying will be well worth a visit by all who are fond of music and fun. Here, where Harry Chapman and his versatile lady are so well known, we run no risk in giving such an assurance.

The entertainment will consist of songs and duets, concluding with a farce, well calculated to display the variety and versatility of the talents of the inimitable Harry and his lady, in which they will also be assisted by Mr. Sam Drake, a son of Mrs. A. Drake, who in times past was a special favorite of the Frankfort people. He also is an actor of great merit, and will doubtless win the good opinion of our theater goers. We advise all who wish to enjoy a pleasant evening to attend the theater to-night.

[For the Yeoman.]
What Ought to be Done.
Ma. Editor: Although I am sure your Frankfort readers can all endorse your article this morning in regard to the absurd rumors which are afloat about our feverish apprehensions of insurrection, it is just as well to take advantage of such occasions, to make wise rules for future action. The only danger we run is from our negro meetings. They ought never to be held at night. Our City Council have made a very judicious movement in ordering them to break up by nine o'clock. They will consult the happiness of the blacks, and the safety of the whites, by forbidding them to assemble for any purpose after dark.

Will not the Council take this into serious consideration, and gratify the wishes of more than one CITIZEN?
SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Greenup Keene, Esq., an old citizen, met with a very serious and painful accident yesterday evening. On his way to Turkey-foot, with a couple of friends, he was thrown from his buggy and had one leg broken short off just above the ankle.—Geo. Gazette.

Democratic Meeting in Jefferson.

In pursuance of previous notice, the Democracy of Jefferson county assembled at Jefferson town on the 19th inst., when the following proceedings were had:

On motion, Mr. Henry W. Smith was called to the Chair, and Geo. Beacher was appointed Secretary.

On motion, the Chair appointed I. L. Hyatt, Samuel L. Geiger, and J. M. Coward committee on resolutions, and empowered to present the names of suitable persons as delegates to the State Convention.

Mr. Geiger reported the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the Democracy of Jefferson county, in convention assembled, take pleasure in reaffirming our belief in and adherence to the Cincinnati platform, and believe its doctrines are, if anything, more pertinent to the present time than at any other; and that only by their dissemination and faithful recognition can we hope to exist as a free and independent people.

Resolved, That all true Democrats can hope to see the perpetuity of our common country exist only by and under a strict construction of the Federal Constitution, and by a firm adherence to the doctrines of civil and religious freedom.

Resolved, That we solemnly protest against the pernicious and insidious doctrines of the Abolitionists of the North as being fraught with peril, circumscribed only by the confines of the Western continent; and that we, on the other hand, entertain no sympathy with the Oppositionists of the South, and earnestly suggest that a common foe is energetically preparing to dismantle our strongholds, and that we must co-operate with our brethren of the North.

Resolved, That we cordially extend to our present Chief Magistrate our continued confidence in his ability, integrity, and his devotion to the constitutional rights of all sections of the Union.

Resolved, That to the people of the Territories, as well as States, belongs the right to regulate and legislate for themselves in local affairs; provided, that their acts are in conformity to the constitution of the United States, as expounded in the decision of the Dred Scott case.

Resolved, That we cordially recommend our distinguished fellow citizen, James G. Thie, as a suitable person to preside as chief magistrate over our common country, believing him eminently qualified for such a position, and we hereby authorize delegates to the State Convention to vote for him by and under a strict construction of the Federal Constitution, and by a firm adherence to the doctrines of civil and religious freedom.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Louisville Courier and Democrat, and Kentucky Yeoman.

On motion, the meeting then adjourned.

HENRY M. SMITH, Chairman
Geo. Beacher, Secretary.

SUSPICIOUS CHARACTERS.—Two individuals, hailing from the State of New York, were in town several days the past week, including Sunday. They were both in the habit of going to the Methodist Church, and were there on Sunday night they were found at the negro Methodist Church, apparently deeply interested in the services of the "colored brethren." We will not stop to argue whether they were of a religious turn of mind—it is sufficient to state that they had seats in the pulpit. Now, as a general thing, the pulpit is a good place for men of time like these, to find two northern men, and strangers, in a pulpit of a negro church, situated in a remote part of town, looks rather suspicious. They could give no very satisfactory account of themselves. They said they had never attended a meeting of the kind, and curiosity led them around.

On Monday morning, discovering that some of our citizens were becoming interested in them, they left town in the direction of Paris; but we have learned that they have since been seen between this place and Lexington. They may be emissaries of old Brown. We would advise them not to come back. Our citizens should keep an eye upon all stragglers who come among us. If any such are found tampering with negroes, they should be treated with a good dose of tar and feathers, and treated to a ride on a rail. Men who don't like slavery, shouldn't come where it exists.—Geo. Gazette.

SUICIDE.—A young man named Moses D. Burrows, residing in Griffin's precinct, committed suicide on Sunday morning last by hanging himself from the limb of a tree. He was about 29 years of age, married, and was temperate, industrious, and a very young man. No real cause was given for the rash act. An inquest was held on the body, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the facts stated above.—Georgetown Gaz.

ANDRAVI; OR, THE IDIOT OF THE ALPS.

BY W. O. EATON.

Far up among the frozen heights of the Alps, their homeward pathway lit up by the declining sun, a band of hunters were making their perilous descent; now threading, with practiced step, the precipitous defiles which would have bewildered and appalled an unaccustomed traveler, and now leaping, with precise and energetic bounds, enormous gorges which yawned between the mountain-sides, and where one careless leap might have sent them instantly to the deep down below. Yet, familiar with these passes from boyhood, and with eyes and limbs as expert as the chamois which they chased, the hardy peasants made the echoes merry with their laughter; and ever and anon wound their horns, till the music reverberated from a thousand peaks, and, piercing to the valleys below, gave pleasing signal to their expectant families that they were coming.

As thus in single file they proceeded, and just as they achieved a long and steep descent, a shout of surprise from the foremost assembled his companions at his side, when they beheld, deeply imbedded in a huge snow-drift, the dark figure of a richly-dressed stranger—evidently not a native of those hills.

"He has fallen from some height above us," exclaimed one, the least of them, not less than two hundred feet; and if he is not lifeless, even from the swiftness of such a deep fall, it is a miracle."

Cautiously venturing from their path across the snow to the place where lay the body, two of the hunters knelt down, and after a brief examination, pronounced the man still alive, but insensible—the soft snow, upon which he had providentially fallen, having saved his body from being dashed to pieces.

"He has dug his own grave, but did not choose to die in it!" said one of the hunters.

"Let us see what a little eau de vie will do for him!" And withdrawing a flask from his breast, he applied it to the lips of the stranger, while others now rubbed his wrists and temples.

The man soon opened his eyes, and became strong enough to stand; but his glance was a vacant and unmeaning one. To all questions, he simply muttered the word, "Andravi," and pointed, with a tremulous finger, to the dread height from which he had fallen.

"He is either a mute, a lunatic, or a simpleton," was the conclusion of his preservers.—"Perchance the fall has unsettled his reason, and no wonder. But let us away, or we may need aid ourselves, for the sun is down."

Lifting the stranger along over their irregular and still dangerous road, they left the spot, and ere long arrived at the nearest home among the mountains; where the stranger was provided with refreshments and a couch by the hospitality of the humble occupants; and the others separated for their respective dwellings.

Sleep and kind care soon restored Andravi, for such was his name, but whether his infirmity of mind was natural, or the result of his fall, the shock and the fright—certain it was that but few words could be elicited from him, and those were incoherent. His mind was wandering and imbecile; and as he could not give any indication as to where his home was, or had been, and was now comparatively helpless, he was suffered to remain among those mountain homes to do what he could learn to do, in return for the affection afforded him; and he soon became widely known among the mountaineers, by the undignified sobriquet of "Le Fou, or, The Idiot."

Yet Andravi was treated by all with a certain respect, growing out of the surmise that the rich dress in which he had been found indicated that he must have been a person of some rank or riches in his own country; and then misfortune, when undesired, always appeals to the human sympathy. And more than all this, Andravi, finally becoming familiar with the mountain-paths, and evincing the possession of remarkable strength, daring, and agility, after having abided for a year in those lofty fastnesses of snow and ice, learned sufficiently to become a professional guide to travelers; and whenever any journey of that kind, requiring special skill and fortitude, was to be undertaken, it was sure to be intrusted to the hardy frame and practiced instinct of the i-tro-pid, though generally mute and otherwise idiotic, Andravi.

His quietude, his usefulness in his adopted calling, and his childlike devotion to those who had been thus kind to him, made the Idiot of the Alps universally regarded, and many a prayer went up, from rude but honest hearts, among those frozen regions, that the All-Seeing Eye might watch over and protect, and some day restore him to reason and his home.

But still for years he dwelt there, and none knew who he was or whence he came. Yet, as year after year rolled by, men learned to look upon him with a sort of awe, as one especially guarded by Providence; since he underwent such risks in the most furious Alpine storms, in the deepest darkness, reckless of the impending avalanches, the most icy and precipitous steep, the most impetuous torrents, or the most treacherous snows. His self-reliance, his adventures, his escapes, like his looks and manner, seemed unnatural; and the Idiot of the Alps was the standing theme of many a thrilling tale of mountain life.

Once, while guiding a small party of enthusiastic tourists through an almost inaccessible and seldom attempted region, while the travelers were felicitating themselves upon achieving such a height, and beholding its sublimities, a lady of the party, venturing near the dizzy brink of a stupendous glacier, dropped a costly necklace, which fell over the edge, far into the icy and perpendicular chasm beneath. Her cry of regret was heard and understood by Andravi, who was instantly at her side; and despite the urgent remonstrances of all, he made signs that he would descend and recover the lost article; and fastening one end of a strong coil to the hunter's pole he bore, and which he buried firmly in the ice above, he rapidly descended the fearful gulf.

"The man is an idiot, and we were idiots to let him do this foolishly feat!" exclaimed one, as breathlessly they gazed upon their guide's descent. "Should his hands fall him, or the rope break, he would be lost, and we, too; for we could neither advance nor retrace our way."

At that moment, the sharp twang of the cord, and a cry of horror from above, announced that the line had indeed been parted; and with faces of dismay, they beheld Andravi fall a few yards beyond the end of the dangling rope, the remaining portion still in his clutch! It was a sight of terror, but relieved in part by their beholding him frantically grasp a stunted tree which projected from a rock, in his descent, and contrived to maintain his hold awhile; but this delay was brief—his gripe relaxed, and he fell again—to the snowy vale below!

From the height which his spectators were, and owing to the dazzling effect of the snow, it was impossible to judge of the distance between the tree and the spot upon which he had fallen; and they strained their despairing eyes after him, at the imminent peril of their own footing, to watch if the too zealous Idiot should move again, or remain dead where he fell.

To their joy, he arose at once, and without looking up, as though his misadventure were of common occurrence or of no particular importance, they saw him search the snow around him, for the necklace for which he had ventured so much. Soon they saw him stoop, and a faint ejaculation which ascended, intimated that he had found it.

But now the wonder was how he was to ascend again. No path was visible on any hand, and the rope was swinging high beyond the tree.

Clasping the chain about his neck, and drawing a knife from his belt, Andravi began to ascend the ragged wall, with the aid of the weapon—cutting, as he ascended, step by step, here and there, in ice or earthy crevice, a temporary hold for hand and foot, until, by painfully protracted efforts, which exhibited iron endurance as well as dauntless heart, he had elevated himself high enough to admit of tying the broken end of the rope around his waist; and from that perilous position, between heaven and earth, he was now cautiously drawn up, by the overjoyed and amazed party above.

Long were the praises and congratulations which greeted the Idiot, as he stood once more in safety among them; and as he flung himself upon a rock to rest awhile, and held out the necklace with a grim smile, its fair owner refused to receive it.

"No, keep it, as a trophy of your heroism, brave fellow!" she cried. "It is valuable; but a poor return for the hazard and labor you underwent, and the wonderful courage you have shown."

Guiding the travelers safely to their next point of destination, and receiving other substantial tokens of their admiration, Andravi returned home, where the fame of the exploit soon followed him—an illustration of many similar acts which, during the ten years of his adventurous life among the Alps, made the Idiot's name illustrious among the mountaineers, and himself an object of curiosity to travelers.

Yet, though there arrived from all climes people of many ranks, none ever came who seemed to know aught about his previous history, or who could satisfactorily solve the mystery which hung about him.

To all, he was the same quiet, listless, un-intelligible creature, active as a guide, but generally mute and incoherent—save in his acts, as an Alpine pioneer, and towards the humble inhabitants of the district where he first had been found, and where he continued to dwell.

The rewards he received from travelers, he distributed, as if by instinctive gratitude, to the neighbors who treated him so kindly; clinging to them and to that mountain region with a majestic attachment, which bound them to him the more, and made him seem a sort of spirit of the spot, by whose side no peril could befall.

Sometimes, with but a scant supply of food, he would be absent for days together, and when tracked and found by his footsteps in the snow, he would be heard mumbling to himself, or absorbed in the contemplation of some lofty mountain-way, as if he expected the promised approach of some one.

But this mode of life was to have an end. As wild a storm as ever heaped an avalanche, filled a deceitful valley, or buried a blind traveler, burst upon the mountains one afternoon, and whirled and whistled through their dismal gorges in frightful fury and bewildering turmoil. Andravi went forth, for such times he seemed to love.

Beneath a snowy cliff, from whose over-arching hoary side a series of many mountain-paths was visible—night not yet having added to the terrors of the tempest—Andravi took his stand; nor had he waited long before he saw a muffled traveler approaching, toiling through the snow towards him.

The Idiot remained motionless and mute, and the stranger stared at the statue-like form as he advanced, and announced that he had lost his way.

"Guide me, if you can, man. I am weary, and will reward you amply. You seem to doubt; but the name of Adrian Lorette carries belief with it in his own country. Why do you stare at me so? Speak to me."

A frantic shriek, and a tiger-like leap upon the stranger, were the answer of Andravi, who bore the stranger fiercely to the earth, while his cry was echoed from every hill around.

But, if the Idiot was agile, the stranger was no less so; and though taken by surprise, as he fell he drew a pistol, and instantly discharged it at the head of the wild-looking assailant. The ball whistled harmlessly by, and the surer weapon of the Idiot's grasp, was employed to as deadly a purpose. The stranger felt that he was being dragged to the edge of the precipice!

The desperation of intense fear lent him strength to resist, but in vain for his own preservation. Slowly the struggling twain neared the horrid brink, till they stood upon its direct verge, when, despairing of future attempts to save himself, Adrian Lorette fastened, with vice-like grip, upon the belt of his adversary, whose last reckless effort precipitated both in the dreaded gulf together!

But they were not yet to die. A shelf intervened, at a short distance, between them and the uttermost chasm, and here, bruised but not stunned, the struggle was continued.

"Who are you? Ruffian!—robber!—you need not murder me. I will give you all I have. But release me here," was the hoarse expostulation of Lorette, as soon as he could speak.

But the iron knee of the Idiot was upon his panting chest, and the fall on the occasion had wrought a magic change upon his reason, if not in his purpose. That reason had returned, as unclouded as ever; and now, while retaining the advantage he had acquired, he looked into the face of his prostrate foe, and spoke to him in tones, fearful, but well-remembered.

"Adrian Lorette, behold in me the friend you sought to murder. This is I, Alonzo Andravi! Ay, shrink, murderous traitor, for this is your death-hour, and the tomb is impatient to receive you. What had I done, O falsest of friends, that you should hurl me from the mountain-pass, even as now I shall hurl you? What from me but too much kindness, had you received, what but wealth and fair equality of companionship—exalting you, as I did, from poverty and friendlessness? O viper! how I treated you, how I trusted you to find, on that last journey, you meant it indeed to be our last. What, what an act was yours, when, knowing yourself my heir, no kinder living to dispute my kindness, you hurled me, as you thought, into the cold abyss to death? Till now, it has seemed a dream—both what you did, and what God has done for me. A weight since then has been upon my brain. A spell has bound me to these regions. The memory of all that went before was lost to me, till now the avenging God set you before me, and set my reason free. Strive not—slave, traitor, child! your efforts are in vain. Die! Thus I find you to the death you designed for me!"

Even as he spoke, and while the first words of a half-formed prayer were upon the lips of the struggling Lorette, Andravi loosened his victim's hold with a giant blow, and then cast him into the white eternity below!

The sharp scream of the falling man ascended to the ear of his destroyer some seconds before his body fell, a mangled mass, upon the icy rocks a hundred fathoms down. The dull sound reached Andravi's hearing, and self-avenged, his reason restored, like one awakened from a long and bitter dream, he turned away by a winding path, and was soon at his mountain-home again.

Those who are most familiar with the phenomena of insanity and idiocy in their innumerable phases, pronounce that the causes and the cares of minds distraught are often wonderful and unaccountable; nor to such judges, will this sudden and prolonged imbecility, and its sudden disappearance, as narrated, seem improbable in nature—conversant as they are with far more remarkable cases, to be found in the melancholy histories of the insane. An avenging Providence might have implanted a mystic instinct in the darkened mind of the Idiot, to bind him to those cheerless regions till the hour of retribution, or the simple gratitude of his partial reason might have detained him among his preservers, thus to become the means of his ultimate restoration and revenge.

Whatever the causes, Alonzo Andravi soon amazed his Alpine neighbors with his true history; and their verdict upon the justice of his tragic deed was mingled with but one regret—the regret of parting with him.

The parting soon took place, though not forever; for having regained possession of the ample estates to which he had once incautiously made his false friend the heir, Andravi often visited the mountain scenes of his misfortune, his madness, his exploits, and his revenge, and did much for the lasting comfort of the friends of that strange period of his life. And to this day are remembered, in grateful and admiring tradition, the brave deeds and benefactions of the Idiot of the Alps.

The Matter-of-fact Man.

"I am what the old women call an 'odd fish'—do nothing under heaven without a motive—never. I attempt nothing unless I think there is a probability of my succeeding. I ask no favors when I think they are not deserved; and finally, I don't wait upon the girls when I think my attentions would be disagreeable. I am a matter-of-fact man—I am, I do nothing seriously. I once offered to attend a young lady home. I did seriously; that is, I meant to wait on her home if she wanted me. She accepted my offer. I went home with her, and it has ever since been an enigma to me whether she wanted me or not. I bade her 'good night,' and she said not a word. I met her next day, and I said not a word. I met her again and she gave me two hours' talk. It struck me as curious. She feared I was offended, she said, and couldn't for the life of her conceive why. She begged me to explain, but did not give me a chance to do so. She said she hoped I wouldn't be offended; asked me to call; and it has ever since been a mystery to me whether she wanted me to call or not."

"I once saw a lady at her window. I thought I would call. I did. I inquired for the lady and was told she was not at home. I expect she was. I went away thinking so. I rather think so still. I met her again. She was offended; said I had not been 'neighborly.' She reproached me for my negligence; said she thought I had been unkind. And I've ever since wondered whether she thought so or not."

"A lady once said to me that she should like to be married, if she could get a good congenial husband who would make her happy, or at least try to. She was not difficult to please, she said. I said 'I should like to get married too, if I could find a wife that would try to make me happy. She said 'Umph!' and looked as if she meant what she said. She did. For when I asked her if she thought she could not be persuaded to marry me, she said she would rather be excused. I excused her. I have often wondered why I excused her."

"A good many things of this kind have happened to me that are doubtful, wonderful, mysterious. What then is it that causes doubt and mystery to attend the ways of men? It is the want of fact. This is a matter-of-fact world, and in order to act well in it, we must deal in a matter-of-fact way."

Meeting of the Fair Company.

At a meeting of the members of the Union Agricultural Association of Mason and Bracken counties, held in the town hall at Germantown, on Saturday, the 15th day of Nov., Doct. J. Taylor Bradford, in the chair, Judge Jos. Doniphan offered the following preamble and resolutions, which were adopted by the Association.

WHEREAS, The members of this Association feel a deep and lively interest in the perpetuation of the State Agricultural Society of Kentucky; and, whereas, to a great extent, the existence of the Society depends upon the amount of aid rendered by the Legislature; therefore,

Resolved, That as Kentuckians we feel justly proud of the reputation of our State for the production of matchless herds of cattle, unrivalled horses, useful developments in agricultural science, mainly attained through the agency of this and similar institutions, and we, therefore, appeal to the Legislature to aid in preserving that reputation by the additional appropriation of five thousand dollars to the support of the Association.

Resolved, That we, members of the Union Agricultural Association, earnestly request our representatives, both Senators and members of the House of Representatives, from the counties of Mason and Bracken, to use all honorable means at the next session, to secure the passage of a bill providing for such an appropriation.

At the same meeting the following preamble and resolutions were offered by Judge Doniphan, and received the unanimous approval of the meeting.

WHEREAS, At the next meeting of the State Agricultural Society of Kentucky an election for officers of the same will be held; and whereas, our fellow-citizens, Col. L. J. Bradford, of Bracken, by his zealous and able advocacy of the appropriations heretofore made by our State Legislature in aid of the society, and on account of his untiring exertions to advance the great tobacco interests of our State—appreciating these services of our fellow citizen, therefore,

Resolved, That we take great pleasure in urging upon the State Agricultural Society the election of Col. Bradford as their next president, believing it will redound to the advantage of the association and to the agricultural interests of the State at large.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded to the Secretary of the State Society, and to the Maysville and Augusta papers.

Resolutions Adopted by the Public Meeting in Nashville, on the Death of G. G. Poindexter.

WHEREAS, We, the friends and fellow-citizens of G. G. Poindexter, Esq., have with feelings of unaffected sorrow heard of his sudden and untimely death, we deem this a proper occasion to meet together and express our great grief at so sad and unexpected an event. Mr. Poindexter departed this life on yesterday morning, the 8th inst., about the hour of nine o'clock—although he had lived a few hours before in buoyant spirits and in anticipation of continued health and life. Our deceased friend and fellow-citizen was a native of the State of Virginia, and was a descendant of a family distinguished for patriotism and courage. He was born on the 30th of November, 1829, and was, therefore, in the thirtieth year of his age.

He graduated Dartmouth College, in the State of New Hampshire, and in the Law School of the Cumberland University at Lebanon. In 1856 he was the Democratic Elector for the Eighth District in this State; and was, in 1857, appointed by the Postmaster General, Chief Clerk of the Post Office Department. He held this office only about one year, when he resigned and became one of the editors of the Union and American newspaper, published in this city. In this position, as well as in all others occupied by him, he manifested a high order of talent, courage and industry. As a writer, he was bold and fearless, yet scrupulously just and forbearing toward his opponents. Never for a moment submitting to anything which his sensitive disposition might deem to be an intended insult, he was always ready to make honorable reparation to others for any offense given by him. Kind and social in his disposition, and possessing sanguine spirits in an eminent degree, he was never depressed even under the most trying and adverse circumstances. To those intimately associated with Mr. Poindexter, he was peculiarly attractive. Having added to his kind and genial disposition a high order of intellect, a high order of intelligence, he was, to those closely associated with him, both agreeable and instructive. And whereas, we regard the death of such a man as a great public loss. Be it therefore Resolved, That we deeply deplore the loss of our friend and fellow-citizen, Geo. G. Poindexter, and tender our heartfelt sympathies to his relatives.

Resolved, That as an evidence of our respect for the deceased, we will attend his funeral from the First Baptist Church on to-morrow afternoon at 2½ o'clock.

A NEW YORK BELLE BARELY ESCAPES MARRIAGE WITH A BOGUS CUBAN.—A New York correspondent says that during the late excitement caused by the Orisio murders, a fellow-representing himself as a Cuban, took lodgings of Mrs. S—, in Bleeker street. His landlady, who had read everything about Miss Bartlett's troussau, (costing something over $600,000) gave him her best apartments and most desirable attentions, for she had learned from the best authority (his own) that he was single, and, like Signor S—, a rich, well-to-do, and successful man. She presented her daughter, Josephine, a pretty blonde, gushing, silly, and fresh from school, to the sorrowful millionaire, and almost threw her into his arms. The bait was eagerly swallowed, and the wooing and wooing and betrothing were hurried up as expeditiously as ever were the old lady's buckwheat cakes. Mrs. S— soon had the pleasure of announcing that her daughter was engaged to a Cuban almost as rich as Miss Bartlett's fiancé.

Don Ochoando Torro, alias Castro de Mentcheroso, her would-be son-in-law, being affected with modesty, desired a private wedding, to which Josephine, who had no father, made no objection. Her uncle, an old sea captain, arrived about nine days ago, and was let into the secret and introduced to the intended. The old salt went through the ceremony rather stiffly, and soon after demanded a private interview with his sister-in-law. "Jane," said he in gruff abruptness, "you may marry this fellow if you like, but my brother's daughter never shall!" "Why not?" He is a Cuban gentleman, and as rich as ——" "A gentleman! He is a nigger, and you are an old fool! I have not had to do with niggers so little as to know a malatto from a Spaniard!" Call Jo, here and let me have a few words with this black fellow alone. I'll soon run him aground, high and dry." The staunch old sailor was as good as his word, and in a marvelous short time afterward, the colored sailor's baggage was bundled out of the house, including the false diamonds he had presented to Josephine, and being assisted by her uncle, he was ordered to leave the premises. His terror-stricken owner was not slow to follow them into the street. It is presumed he will not engage himself to another white girl till his pained feelings are healed.

From Jefferson Territory.

The St. Louis Republican, of 23d, publishes the message of R. W. Steele, who has assumed the Governorship of the proposed new Territory of Jefferson. A correspondent of that paper writes from Denver City on the 10th as follows:

Since my last the officers of the Provisional Government have entered upon their duties. The movement seems to have the general support of the people. Gov. Steele appears to be a gentleman in every sense of the word, and, unlike most men who aspire to high office, a sober man, and enjoys the respect and esteem of all.

In selecting officers for the Provisional Government, politics were not introduced. They were selected from both parties, their politics being frequently unknown. Governor Steele proves to be a Democrat from Nebraska, while Chief Justice Allison is a Republican from Kansas. I presume that the politics of two thirds of the Legislature is still unknown.

The Council was organized by electing Henry Allen, formerly of Council Bluffs, President, and the House of Representatives by electing J. A. Gray, formerly of Indiana, Speaker. Mr. Gray is a young man of considerable talent, and his position is a high one. Both branches of the Legislature contain talent of a high order, and will compare favorably with the Legislatures of the older States. Many of the members have already had experience as legislators.

A green sprig from the Emerald Isle entered a boot and shoe shop to purchase a pair of brogans. After overhauling his stock in trade without being able to suit his customer, the shoekeeper hinted that he would make him a pair to order. "An what'll ye ax to make a good pair of 'em?" was the query. The price was named, the Irishman demurred, but after a "bating down" the thing was a trade. Paddy was about leaving, when the other called after him, asking, "But what size shall I make them, sir?" "Och," cried Paddy, promptly, "I don't mind about the size at all—make them as large as ye conveniently can for the money."

A MELANCHOLY CASE.—One of the most melancholy occurrences that can transpire in female life, came to the light of day a week or two ago. A young lady, moving in most excellent society in our good city of Covington, loved a young gentleman "not wisely, but too well," and the life of that love was an heir out of the pale of wedlock. The disgrace of the thing so weighed upon the mind of the young lady's mother that reason fled, and in the early part of last week her friends were compelled to transfer her to the Lunatic Asylum at Lexington, Ky.—Cin. Enq.

CURIOUS FISH STORY.—Mr. James Cunningham, of this county, in opening the head of a hog, the other day, found in the brain, a minnow about two inches long, dead but entirely sound and perfect. This will be considered a pretty tough story, but it rests upon the statement of an entirely trustworthy gentleman, and we are not at liberty to doubt its truth. The fish no doubt came from a creek, to which the hog had access, but how did it get into the brain?

Paris Citizen.

NOTICE.—In the Scott Circuit Court on Monday, Victor Phillips, charged with stealing a horse from Mr. Benj. Osborn, was found guilty. The court fined him $100, and ordered the horse to be sold. Outside Window-shutters, Phillips has been in jail at this place for ten months past.—Georgetown Gaz.

"Harry" Stokes, the Man-Woman.

The most remarkable woman of this century was "Harry" Stokes, the bricksetter, who committed suicide in the sluice of the river Irwell, at Mode Wheel, England, lately. For about thirty years this extraordinary person lived in Manchester and Salford as a journeyman and master-bricksetter; had been twice married to other women; had kept beer-houses, and served customers at the tap as a "jolly landlord;" had worked at her trade as a brick-setter, and erected many important buildings in both towns, and had obtained the reputation of being the most skillful fire-grate setter and "chimney doctor" in the neighborhood. She always dressed as a man, in the clothing peculiar to her trade; invariably superintended the men in her employment; and could lift a weight, spread the mortar, and set a brick with the best of them. Her habits were those of a man. She attended a daily ordinary in the town along with other bricksetters, drank, smoked, and joked with the hardest, and joined in the evening carousal.

Yet, with all this constant and close intimacy with the opposite sex, the strong-minded woman contrived to keep her own great secret; and there is every reason to believe that she has gone down into the grave at the advanced age of sixty, or thereabout, having throughout the whole of her remarkable life maintained an unbroken check upon those passions which crowd the streets of every large town with the unfortunate of her sex. Her great endeavor was on all occasions to keep up the manly character she had assumed. From a child she had been accustomed to the severe work of one of the most laborious occupations in which man is engaged, and the skill she had attained in the trade reveals an amount of persevering energy which made her worthy of a better fate than that of the wretched suicide.

She was the daughter of a bricklayer in a village in the neighborhood of Doncaster. Before she could well balance her own little body she was made "useful" in the house, and ere many years had passed over her head she was brought into acquaintance with some of the roughest and toughest work in those hard-wrought days. Little Harriet Stokes' line had not been laid in pleasant places. She was so ground down by the iron hand at home that, when she was about eight years old, she put on a tattered suit of boy's clothing, and walked forth into the "wide, wide world."

Arrived at the village of Whithy, she looked about for work. She had not run away from her father's house because she did not like work, and preferred to eat the bread of idleness. The hard treatment of parents, ignorant of their responsibility, had driven her from the protection of home, and from all the associations which should enchain the young mind to home. That she was not afraid of hard work was apparent when she offered her services to a brick-setter in Whithy. Though somewhat undersized, she appeared a broad-set, active, useful lad, and was speedily set to work. Her first efforts to please were attended with success, and she was soon taken as an apprentice.

From this point we must drop the feminine appellative and speak of "Harry Stokes" as a boy who has worked his way to the dignity of a journeyman bricksetter. For something like twenty years from this point we lose the connecting links which join his York-shire experience to his Manchester life. About twenty-five years ago he was brought prominently under the notice of the public, by the consequence of an eccentric excursion which he had taken into the domains of matrimony. Harry Stokes, wanting a companion in life, executed a matrimonial contemptum. True to his role as a man—for he had reached the age when the average of brick-setters are fathers as well as journeymen—he cast about and fixed his choice upon a plump little widow, who kept a beer-house in Cupids-alley, of Deansgate, Manchester. He had been accustomed to take his pot of beer and smoke his short pipe under Betsy's roof, and had at last taken a decided fancy to Betsy herself.

He was a good-looking young man, was Harry Stokes, for, although still undersized and innocent of whiskers, a face as smooth as a woman's, he was stoutly built, had a capacious depth of chest, and a pair of hips which gave an unusual profit to his tailor. Betsy then looked with favor on Harry's suit, for he had the reputation of being a good steady workman, and was doing pretty well as a bricksetter. It was resolved that the twain should become one flesh; and so to the church they hied. Harry discharged the duties of a bridegroom at church to perfection; but when the widow got him home there was a terrible row. The night was spent in downright quarrel and fight; and the lamentable result was a summons taken out by Betsy against her husband for an assault, for which he was condemned to the New Bailey for one or two months. During the hearing of the case, Betsy, with vehemence, declared that her husband was not a man, and that she therefore would not live with him.

The case created great amusement and gossip at the time, and formed the subject of popular ballads, which were sung and hawked about the streets of Manchester. "Harry" Stokes, on issuing from the New Bailey, was considerably persecuted by those little gamins, who know so well how to torment street celebrities, while he was also the object of much curious speculation among the brethren of the trowel. He, however, maintained a strict silence as to his sex, threw out hints that the woman he had married was mad, and as the most effective proof that she was a malevolent libeler, he soon afterward married another widow, rejoicing in the name of Frances Collins, who was some fifteen or twenty years his senior, and had a grown up son and daughter living with her. His connection with this woman, with whom he lived until he committed suicide, is the most mysterious phase of this most mysterious history. She declares with solemn earnestness that she did not know, until informed the other day, that the person with whom she had been living for the last twenty-five years, sleeping together night after night in the same bed, was a woman, and her own children looked upon Stokes as their stepfather.

She asserts that she took Stokes into her house in the first instance out of pity, to shield him from the persecution to which he was subjected. It may be that, although out of sense of shame the old woman thus attempts to conceal her knowledge of Stokes' sex, she did in reality know from the first that the person was a woman, and that she was in all probability induced by Stokes to consent to the union in order that the appearance of married life might dispel the rumors of a libel, and enable him to live in "peace and quietness." Whether or not that was the intention, the acquaintance brought about that result; for although there were surmises that "Harry" Stokes was a woman, and he was constantly the object of curious glances, he escaped the open molestation to which he had been previously subjected.
